

Insurance for the manufacturing sector

What are the key risks in the manufacturing sector?

Manufacturing is a diverse industry, and one that is changing at a rapid pace thanks to the effects of technology and globalisation. The risks manufacturers face are complex, and could range from lost production time due to a mechanical outage, fire or supply chain failure, to a product recall due to a defect. In many cases, they will also be specific to what your business manufactures.

Workers' compensation is also a major risk for manufacturing businesses and cyber insurance is growing in importance as hackers pose a risk to both the smooth functioning of your systems and machinery as well as your confidential business data.

Who should consider insurance?

Insurance for manufacturers covers different manufacturing methods and product types including food, pharmaceutical, clothing, automotive, chemical, electrical, industrial and machinery, and many others. Insurance can protect you and your employees onsite, on the way to work and at work. Having the right cover is essential to help protect your business, your staff and your trading partners.

"Australia's manufacturing industry contributes around $100 billion to Australian GDP annually and employs around 900,000 people."

Australian Bureau of Statistics, 2020.

Did you know?

The manufacturing industry has the highest number of workers' insurance claims when compared to other industries.

Recall

Automotive and industrial manufacturers are subject to the highest volume of product recall insurance claims, followed by food and beverage manufacturers and retail goods manufacturers.

(Statista, Share of product recall insurance claims from selected industries worldwide - 2017)

Intellectual property theft, interruption of operations and direct theft of funds are three of the biggest cyber risks facing manufacturers.

Case Study

Susan runs a manufacturing business making cookies, which she supplies to a major airline group. On a flight one day, plastic fragments were discovered in one of her cookies, sparking a recall and product liability lawsuit, and attracting negative publicity. As Susan had both product liability and product recall insurance, the costs associated with the recall and lawsuit were covered, as was the cost of restoring the reputation of her brand following the incident.
